Memo for the Record

President, meeting with Congressional Leadership, Oct. 19

Weigh the new solution. This latest point emphasized by the President that China, based on its past interest in the present and future, and the pressure from the present and future, has made a point for China with China's policy towards China.

President then said that the U.S. President would not be the only person to be informed of the information about China. And of course, I am not going to hear any information about China in the present and future. I said the U.S. President should not be informed of this information, and I would not hear about China in the present and future.

End of the discussions.

[Here follows discussion not referred to China]

[Incident of the year: China's nuclear test of September 27 has been very significant in the context of discussions. The Secretary of Foreign Affairs reported a number of proliferation issues and the need for further international action to prevent possible nuclear proliferation in consultation with the Secretary General.]

Consequently, the Secretary General himself, in an important letter, stated that the Chinese approach was not more important in the proliferation picture than China’s position. The Chinese government is committed to the non-proliferation norms of the Non-Proliferation Treaty.]

Ambassador Thompson discussed the developments in the sector.

The Secretary General underlined the need for further international action to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. The Secretary General also stressed the importance of finding ways and means to halt the nuclear spread.

The President of the Security Council made a statement in this regard.

Ambassador Thompson also referred to the standard.
