K: I had a call from Dobrynin this afternoon and he said he had a message for you on that Summit and also on the Jordanian situation. I was very cool to him and said I didn't know if your schedule permitted you to see him.

P: I will not see him. If he wants to give a message, he can see you. I didn't give him...

K: I handed him the first and Haig handed Vorontsov the second. If you want to come to Map Room after and get . . .

P: I am not going to go to him and take a message unless it is positive -- I am not going to waste my time.

K: Why don't I tell him you should give me the message?

P: Tell him you would like to take a look at it and that you would look at my schedule. I don't think we want to appear that everytime he comes back I am going to slobber over him. Tell him if there is something substantive that would justify my seeing him, I will, but if it is just routine I can't do it. Let's put it that way.

K: Good, I will call him. I had lunch with the Time people -- I think it went very well. I gave them the same I gave this morning.

P: You think I ought to spend a few minutes with Sidey?

K: I don't think it would hurt.

P: Okay, fine, Henry. We will see you -- you are coming tonight.

K: I will be there by 9:00 p. m.

P: Do about the same as you did.

K: About 20-25 minutes.

P: About 25 minutes -- like you did this morning. No other new developments?

K: No. The army seems to be continuing to clean out the Fedayeen. Some reports that the Iraqis are changing into Fedayeen uniform.

P: On the Dobrynin thing, let me leave it to your judgment. Take the message and tell him if the message justifies my seeing him you will work it out.

K: Right, Mr. President.

P: Right. Say, Mr. Ambassador, he is leaving and is cleaning out several things -- which is true. Okay?

K: Right.
